

There shouldn't be any restrictions on what people can record with digital television. There aren't any technical restrictions preventing people from recording analog television programs right now, and there shouldn't be any technical restrictions preventing the recording of digital television programs either.

The FCC should try to do what's best for the public, even if some companies don't like it as much, and what's best for the public is to not have the restrictions. So if the FCC actually goes through and allows something like this, then it just goes further to make the FCC look like a joke, and a pawn to big business.
